RSK 038	Channelled Stream, S of Bron y Garth	NDA	HER	33921	The Nant yr Efail, flowing westwards towards the Afon Dwyryd has been channelled at this point, with a simple crossing point created at SH62163778. This would appear to have taken place before 1842, as the land is shown in its current form on the tithe map of 1842 (Fig. 4). On the 25 inch 1st edition Ordnance Survey map the channelled stream is shown as it is now (Fig. 5). It would seem to have been carried out as part of land improvement, to improve the land from salt marsh to good quality pasture land. The stream appears in its original meandering course in the 1770 estate map	Post Medieval	262235	337795

					(NLW Vol. 2 094/8/3; Fig. 3), so the work must be likely to have been carried out between 1770 and 1840.
RSK 039	Boundary Wall, Llandecwyn	NDA	HER	33922	A dry stone wall forming a field boundary, which extends for 48m northwards from its junction with the road to the south west. It appears to have been truncated at its northern end by the construction of the original Water Treatment Works. The original line ran north eastwards and met the 1833 Turnpike Road under the current works (Fig. 5). It is unlikely to be earlier than 19th century in date as it is on the reclaimed land. RSK 041	Trackway, Minffordd	NDA	HER	58445	A linear earth embankment and track running north-west from Minffordd towards the Afon Glaslyn, which appears to represent the south-eastern end of the pre-Maddocks route across Traeth Mawr. The feature is shown on the OS map of 1838 and the John Evans map of 1797.	Post Medieval	259505	338655
RSK 042	Embankment, Minffordd	NDA	HER	58446	An earthen linear embankment originally protecting an area of low lying land from tidal inundation. The feature has been adapted and altered during the 19th century and now carries the road to Garth quarry and has been truncated by the embankment of the Cambrian Railways and its level crossing. The embankment was probably constructed during the 18th century, though its association with Plas Newydd hints at an earlier date (possibly late 17th century). The feature appears on the OS map of 1838 and is indicated on the John Evans map of 1789.	Post Medieval	259595	338705
RSK 043	Bank, SE of Bron-y-garth Hospital	NDA	HER	58449	A discontinuous low earth and stone bank which runs roughly N from the existing A487, to the east of Bron-y-Garth Hospital. Appears on the Tithe map of 1845, and divides an area known as Bryniau Cochion.	Post Medieval	260535	338725 aggregate producer by Tarmac Quarry Products (North West) Ltd. Key historic landscape characteristics: quarry, industrial archaeology. The quarry has continued to expand and has significantly altered the skyline of Garth, especially as seen from the Cob, in recent years. Its corrugated iron crusher plant is a prominent feature but, although it has never had an archaeological survey, it has expanded its workings and there is not thought to be much of significant industrial archaeological interest on the site. Conservation priorities and management: liaison with quarry management in terms of future recording as an industrial landscape may be interesting RSK 141	Granite Quarry, Y Garth, Minffordd	NDA	HER, RCAHMW	20510, 405432	Working granite quarry. In the extreme north east corner of the site an overgrown rectangular ruin lay within a dense deciduous woodland. Despite substantial overgrowth, it was clear that the structure (approximately 10m x 5m) consisted of well faced stone walls on at least three sides, possibly indicating the remains of a Medieval or post Mediaeval building. Gruffydd & Riley 1992) Garth quarry, also known as the Minffordd sett quarry, was first operated on a small scale from c.1856, though only officially opened in 1870. The quarry was worked by three different companies between 1870 and 1890, making use of the newly opened Cambrian Railway. The quarry is still active and little of archaeological interest remains. The road scheme largely avoids the quarry, mostly overlying the existing course of the Cambrian Railways, and only affects the extreme southern edge of the site where the rail sidings connected to the Cambrian railway.
